Palaeography and orthography

Abbreviations

Expanded abbreviations are indicated with italics. These include, but are not limited to:

- macrons or suspension marks over vowels to indicate elided /m/ or /n/ (e.g., 95v.05, word 8: monde);
- superscript /9/ to indicate /-us/ (e.g., 86r.20, word 4: vous);
- /p/ with a stroke through the descender (/☐/) to indicate /per/ (e.g., 86v.03, word 6: pere) or /par/ (e.g., 86r.07, word 5: partie);
- /p/ with a suspension mark above to indicate /pri-/ (e.g., 91r.02, word 8: prie);
- Tironian et (/⁊/) to indicate /et/ (e.g., 88r.28, word 8: et);
- low punctus with superscript /r/ to indicate /-ur/ (e.g., 95r.22, word 4: pour);
- /s/ with an oblique stroke to indicate /ser/ (e.g., 90r.16, word 3: serviteur).

Capitalization

We preserved original capitalizations throughout (also see “Letter forms,” infra).

Diacritics

We declined to add modern accent marks.

Letter forms

Throughout, we preserved /y/ wherever it occurs, regardless of modern French orthographic convention, preserving, for example, ‘luy’ (86r.19, word 4) and ‘ny’ (86r.21, word 4).

We normalized all instances of long /ſ/ to short /s/, transcribing, for instance, ‘ſans’ as ‘sans’ (86r.10, word 2).

In the cases of /u/ versus /v/ and /i/ versus /j/, we adopted modern letter forms where warranted by context. That is, where the target letter denoted a consonant, we recorded it as a consonant; for instance, we transcribed,

- ‘merueilles’ as ‘merveilles’ (86r.21, word 6);

- ‘Iuda’ as ‘juda’ (86r.03, word 8).

Similarly, where the target letter denoted a vowel, we recorded it as a vowel; for instance, we transcribed,

- ‘vne’ as ‘une’ (86r.02, word 8);
- ‘xxiiij’ as “xxiiii’ (97v.11, word 5).

Our scribe occasionally used inconsistent variants of /s/, /d/, /r/, and /j/ mid-sentence (e.g. 95r.11, word 8; 95r.11, word 9). Since these do not form a consistent pattern and thus prove difficult to construe as intentional majuscules, we transcribed them as lower-case forms.

Punctuation

Throughout, we preserved the original punctuation, rendering the punctus as /·/, and transcribing paraphs with a pilcrow (i.e. ¶). Where warranted, we indicated colour via markup; for example, ¶ (89r.08).

Scribal emendations

Where scribal corrections or insertions were made via superscription, we tagged the additions accordingly, e.g.,

- la grace ^{de dieu} ce que (90v.21);
- et les ^{biens} temporelz (93r.04).

We transcribed marginal additions at their designated places in-line with insertion tags, e.g.,

- mye <ins>digne</ins> de eulx (90r.07).

We tagged scribal deletions—whether made via strikethrough or erasure—with deletion tags; for instance,

- ~~merveille~~ (86v.11);
- ~~[de dieu]~~ (92v.17).

Spacing and word segmentation

Rather than consistently adding or eliminating spaces between words to more closely correspond with modern orthography, we left word segmentation to the discretion of individual transcribers. Where letters were elided between words, we declined to add apostrophes.

When a word spanned a line-break, and this rupture was marked by the scribe, the division was indicated by a hyphen /-/, e.g., at 89r, ‘de-mourez’ (spanning lines 10–11).

Spelling

We followed our manuscript's original spelling, transcribing unusual or atypical spellings without comment. For instance, terminal /z/ on words spelled with a terminal /s/ in modern French were left as-is, e.g., 'filz' (89r.25, word 2).

Uncertain readings were indicated via enclosure in square brackets, e.g., ~~[de dieu]~~ (92v.17).

Layout and paratext

Catchwords

Our manuscript lacks catchwords.

Foliation

Our manuscript includes just one set of foliation. Rendered in Hindu–Arabic numerals, in black ink, in a modern hand, it appears on each folium at the upper right hand recto. We declined to transcribe this feature.

Line breaks

See "Mise en page," infra.

Marginalia

We described marginalia at the bottom of the corresponding transcription section, with a brief note within square brackets, e.g.

- [Marginalia: Left margin at line 15, in black ink, in an early hand: "Nota"] (91v)

We transcribed interlinear additions where they appear, using superscript tags, e.g.,

- ^{en ce monde je craindera en lautre} (93v, between 18 and 19)

For marginal scribal insertions or corrections, see: "Scribal insertions and deletions," supra.

Mise-en-page

Our scribe copied in a single column throughout. We preserved line breaks as they appear in the manuscript, indicating each break with a single return.

Headers

Our scribe centred one header. We followed his lead using mark-up, thus,

- ℘Auctorites de pluseurs docteurs· (89v.16).

Decoration and additions

Additions

We described the sole addition—an institutional stamp centred at bas de page on 95v—at the bottom of the corresponding section of the transcription, with a brief note within square brackets.

Diagrams and images

Our manuscript lacks diagrams and images.

Initials

We marked-up enlarged decorative initials, indicating their colour and relative size; for instance,

- Confesse (90v.23, word 1).

Similarly, we marked-up smaller, in-line coloured initials as follows,

- Hee (89r.22);
- Amour (89r.12).

Rubrication

Throughout the manuscript, majuscules are heightened by addition of a stroke of ink, now often brown, but likely originally plain yellow, which has oxidized. We transcribed these as bolded majuscules, thus,

- De (89r.05, word 5).

Headings and some passages of text are sublineated in red or blue. We marked-up these stretches of text accordingly; for example,

- majestatis in excelsis (87r.26).

At 87r, two words are struck through heavily with red. The function of this intervention—whether heightening, cancellation, or something else—remaining unclear, we tagged as follows,

- dei patris (87r.26).
